Tick Tock (1996) is a novel by Dean Koontz. It is significantly out-of-genre for Koontz: after a typical horror opening, the tone of the plot changes to screwball comedy and the humour increases steadily to the end. The subplot of protagonist Tommy Phan's struggle to reconcile his family's tenacious hold on their Vietnamese roots with his personal desire to be purely American is essential to the plot development.

Dean Koontz is one of my favorite authors and I have read most of his books. What I liked about this one was the light hearted and comical approach, unlike his usual, fear driven intensity.
